

COMMUNICATIONS AND MISUNDERSTANDINGS

When we speak to someone we are most often crystal clear with what we mean to say in our heads yet have a lot of unspoken data that supports the content of what we are communicating. This is just as true for the person we are speaking to; they are crystal clear about their intent on the subject but also have unspoken information that validates their view.

Learning to communicate effectively means learning to give context to your communications that others can understand. Those that are self-aware bring to the conversation a higher ability to effectively communicate their thoughts, feelings and beliefs. Put multiple parties with this ability together and extraordinary communication, understanding and productivity can unfold! Join PL&L for an exciting opportunity to develop your ability to become an effective communicator!
